It is commonly assumed that the 'wakeman' who was chief magistrate was the head of the body of 'wakemen' referred to in quots. 1478 and 1511, but there is evidence of the existence of two wakemen in 1478 (Mem. Ripon (Surtees) III. 259 Et in denariis sol(ut)is. ministris ville Ripon vocatis Wakemen, dr.servientibus feretru in festo Ascensionis Domini [and other payments], cap. per diem 4*d*., 2*s*.d. 1522 Ibid. 277 De 26*s*. 8*d*. similiter per ipsum receptis de diversis personis electis in officium lez Wakeman. c 1569 *Acc. The suffix in Teut. verbs of this class was originally confined to the present stem; cf. Goth. fraihnan, frah, frehnun, also keinan, pa. pple. kijnans. The original conjugation in OE. may have been *wecnan, woc, wocen, wacen, but the conjugation of wecnan as a regular weak verb goes back to the earliest known period of the language; in ON. vakna is weak, the strong pa. t. being wanting.]

Walk (wɔlk), *v.*1 Pa. t. and pa. pple. walked (wɔlkt). Forms: Inf. and pres. stem: 1 wealcan, wealcian, 2, 3 walki-en, 4 wale, 2–7 walke, 6 walok(e, Sc. valk, 8–9 Sc. wauk, 4– walk. Pa. t. a. strong 1 wēolc, 3–5 walk(e, 5 walke, wilke; B. weak 1 wealcede, 4 walkide, walkit, 5 walkude, walkyd, 6 walokt(e, (6 Sc. walkit), 4– walked. Pa. pple. a. strong 3 i-walken, walke; B. weak 5 walkude, 3– walked. [OE. had two forms: (1) wealcan reduplic. str. vb. (pa. t. wēolc, pa. pple. gewealcen), to roll, toss (trans. and intr.); (2) wealcian weak vb., occurring only twice, in the senses 'to muffle up' (gl. obvolvere), to curl (hair: gl. calamistrare). One or both of these vbs. may have had also the sense 'to full (cloth)': see WALK *v.*2 The corresponding forms in the other Teut. langs. are: OHG. walchan str. vb., recorded only in pa. pple. giwalchen, firwalchen, felted, matted (said of hair: gl. cumeratus); MHG. walken (pa. t. wielc, pa. pple. walken; later conjugated weak), to kneed, to roll (paste) into balls in the palms of the hands; rarely, to move about (trans. and intr.), to turn into something; usually, to full (cloth), whence to cudgel, drub; mod.G. walken wk. vb., to full, to cudgel;

(M)LG., (M)Du. walken wk. vb., to full, to work (felt), to cudgel; ON. valka (Icel. válka, mod. valka) wk. vb., to drag about, to torment, refl. to wallow; MSw. valka wk. vb., to roll (a morsel) about in the mouth, Norw. valka wk. vb. to crumple in the hand, MDa. valke wk. vb. to torment; the mod.Sw. valka, Da. valke (wk.), to full, prob. take their sense from LG.

The strong pa. t. survived into the 15th c.; the weak conjugation, recorded from the 13th c. onwards, may perh. not be a survival of the rare OE. wealcian but an instance of the frequent change of inflexion from strong to weak. The corresponding weak vb. in continental Teut. is prob. to be explained in this way.

It is remarkable that to the end of the OE. period the sense of the str. vb. was 'to roll', and that from the beginning of the ME. period it was 'to move about, travel'. The explanation of this apparently sudden change may be that the ME. sense had arisen in OE. as a colloquial (perhaps jocular) use, and that when the literary tradition was interrupted after the Conquest, and people wrote as they spoke, the original meaning of the word was no longer current.

The OTout. root walk- has no certain affinities in any other branch of the Indogermanic family; phonologically the Skr. valg- to leap, dance, and the L. vulgus bow-legged, might be related, but there is no clear similarity of meaning.)

†1. intr. a. In OE. (str. vb.). Of the waves: To roll, toss. b. In early ME. of persons: To toss about restlessly. Obs.

In OE. also trans. (str. vb.) to turn over, roll; also fig. to turn over in one's mind, consider; (wk. verb) to curl (hair); to press together (cf. WALK *n.*¹). For examples see Hosworth-Toller.

II. intr. To journey, move about, esp. on foot.

†2. To go from place to place; to journey, wander. Also with cogn. obj. and (one's ways).

In quot. a 1000 the sense appears to be 'to pass over'; if so, the gloss is the only example within the OE. period of any anticipation of the ME. development of the meaning of the word; but it may be significant that the reference is to motion on the sea.

g. With advs. in, up, †forth, and const. into, the use of this vb. instead of the indefinite come or go sometimes implies an additional notion of absence of pausing or hesitation. So, †in the ceremonious language of invitation ' (J.), Walk in = 'come in' (now chiefly in rustic use). Similarly in the showman's 'Walk up! walk up!' when the show is on a raised platform.

In general, the tendency to substitute 'come' or 'go' for this verb has become much more prevalent since the 16–17th c.

1. OE Mythol The designation of a class of goddesses or female dæmons supposed to hover in or ride through the air over battle-fields and decide who should be slain corresponding to the Scandinavian Valkyrie.
The OE word (apart from the transferred sense) is found only in the rendering of L Bellona, the goddess of war, or of names of the Furies and Gorgons of classical mythology Possibly the conception may have been less definite in Old English than in the Scandinavian belief of later times, according to which these 'war maidens' were twelve in number (The Gee Walkiria, widely known from Wagner's drama, is from ON , not from OE.)

Wall, *v.*1 Obs. exc. dial. Forms: 1 weallan, 2–5 walle-n, 7– wall. Pa. t. 1 weól(l, 3 weol, wul, 4 weel; weak 4 walleđe, 7– walled. [OE. weallan redupl. str. vb. (pa. t. weóll, pa. pple. *gewealle*n) corresp. to OFris. walla to well up (WFris. walle to boil), MFlem. wallen (Kilian) to well up (mod.Flem. to boil), OS. wallan str. vb., to boil up, gush forth (MLG. wallen), OHG. wallan str. vb., to boil, gush forth (MHG. wallen, mod.G. wk., to boil, be agitated, swarm, etc.).

The transitive uses do not occur in OE., and as they are found only with the weak conjugation, it is possible that they descend not from OE. weallan, but from wallan var. of wiellan, wellan WELL v.; cf. mod. Sc. wall (WELL sb.) repr. OE. wælla var. of wiella. The transitive senses below are closely paralleled by those of WELL v., and its equivalents in other Teut. langs.

The Teut. wallanan* (= walla-) redupl. vb. with the sense 'to boil, bubble up' is confined to WGer.; but a cogn. and synonymous wellan str. vb. exists in ON. vella (Sw. välla), MSw. vælla str. vb. (Sw. välla, Da. vælde str. vb.), and a causative type walljan* wk. vb. in ON. vella (Sw. valla) to boil (trans.), to weld = MHG. wellen, OE. wiellan: see WELL, WELD vbs. For other Teut. derivatives of the root in the same specific sense see WALM, WELL sb.; cf. also Goth. wulan to be fervent. It is probable that the sense 'to boil, bubble, well up' is developed from the sense 'to roll', which belongs to the root wel-* in Teut. and Indogermanic (see WALLOW v.) for the form wall-s-* cf. OHG. wella roller, axle (MHG., mod.G. welle), wallen str. vb. trans. to roll.

Wall-eyed (wɔ̄l,əid), a. Forms: α. 5 wawil-, waugle-, 6 whaule-, 7 whale-, 6– wall-eyed; β. 5 wald-eyed. [The surviving form descends from ME. wæwil-eyed, a. ON. vagl-eygr, occurring only once, and explained in the context as 'one having speckled eyes'. The second element, -eygr, is regularly f. augo Eye 2b. The first element, vagl, is of obscure origin; it coincides in form with vagl beam of wood, roost, perch (Da., Norw. vagl, Sw. vagel) which is used in the Icel. New Testament of 1540 for the 'beam' in the eye spoken of in Matt. vii. 3–4; it is, however, prob. a distinct word, not recorded separately in ON., but surviving in mod. Icel. vagl film over the eye, Sw. vagel sty in the eye.

Beside wæwil-eyed ME. had a synonymous wald-eyed. This is commonly believed to be a. ON. vald-eygr: but that word is only a conjectural reading for valdeygr, occurring in a series of adjs. designating certain defects which may have; the context does not show whether a physical blemish or a fault of temper is referred to, and if -eygr be correct it must app. mean 'having a staring point in front' (cf. the correction to valdeygr in the coincidence with the ME. form); but the meaning of vald- remains obscure. Cf. mod. Slovnig dial. valdnout having a staring eye; the gypsy (quoted by Molbech from Outzen's MS. collections), which Outzen would derive from vadat dial. var. of Da. vatte wavy.

The rare ME. Woldeneyed seems to be synonymous with wæwil-eyed, wald-eyed, and if so is prob. an alteration of the latter form due to the influence of ME. wælden, OE. gewealden small (preserved, with different sense, in Sc. Waldin a.). See also Wald- a. Cf. Waldneire, prob. a similar variant of Wall-eye.]

1. Having one or both eyes of an excessively light colour, so that the iris is hardly distinguishable from the white. In Sc. and in modern dialects (see Eng. Dial. Dict.). In other senses: Having eyes of differing colour; having eyes or an eye streaked or particoloured. Also, having a divergent squint, which exposes an excessive proportion of the white of the eye.

In many examples the sense cannot be determined.

ONF. walopper* = F galoper (see GALLOP v.)] The existence of this form is evidenced in addition to the English forms by OF. walot sb. pl and the adopted form Flem. walop(pe, MHG. walop, alp sb MHG. walopieren vb, and probably by mod Walloon (Sigart) waloper to rinse linen in water Cf. Norw (Aasen) val(l)hoppa vb, app an etymolo gizing alteration, after Norw. hoppa to leap, dance A satisfactory origin for the word in French has not been suggested It is probably native, or, as rich as the evi dence of some Teut element or elements. The Provençal form galaupar has suggested Teut galaupan* (OE gehlēapan, f. ge Y prefix + hlēapan to LEAP), but the evidence for original w precludes the comparison of the initial element

In English the onomatopoeic suggestion of the word has lent itself to varied extension of meaning in the verb (usually colloq and humorous) application to violent noisy movements, more especially since the form GALLOP existed from the more elevated region in the course of the 16th c.]

I The sense 'to boil rapidly' is probably derived directly by transference from sense 1 (cf GALLOP v. 2 'to boil') in spite of the close resemblance of the word to LEAP, both in 16th c. form and in sense (cf. to upwallen) The relation of POTWALLOPER to POTWALLER indicates that some such association was active

The sense 'to beat' may be ultimately due to the causative, see GRETE v.[1] 2, and cf. †to gallop (trans.), or may be entirely due to onomatopoeic extension]

Wallwort (wǭ̆lwɑ̆t). Forms: 1 walh-, weal-, wal-, wælwyrt, vealyrt, 3, 6 walwurt, 4-7 walwort (5 -wourte), 6 walwoote, -woort, (walwourte, walworth), 5 wellsuorte, wallewort, 6 wallwort. [OE. wealhwyrt, f. wealh, a (Celtic or Roman) foreigner, a 'Welshman' (see Welsh a.) + wyrt herb, plant, Wort *sb.*1

It is very unlikely that wealh in this word has the same import as in wealh-hnutu Walnut, where it is equivalent to 'exotic'; no reason can be shown why the Dwarf Elder should have been called 'the foreign herb'. More probably the name, like its later synonyms Danewort, Danes'-blood, Danesweed, expresses the popular belief that this plant was a product of soil fertilized by the carnage of battle. When the 'Welshman' was succeeded by the Dane as the foe on English soil, the plant supposed to be a native of battlefields received a new name. It is possible, though not certain, that the occasional OE. form wealwyrt is not a variant of wealhwyrt, but a separate word, wel slaughter, the slain in battle (see Wal). Cf. Lincolnshire (literally 'corpse-plum'), which in the earliest known example (c 1450) denotes the Dwarf Elder, though it was soon afterwards misapplied (through misinterpretation of its synonym wallwort: cf. 2 below) to the Pellitory of the Wall. It is very remarkable that in Swedish the Dwarf Elder is locally called Danskablod (Danes' blood), wanaskarf (enemy's blood), wanaskarf-ört or Wort *sb.*1) and valört; in the last name the first element may correspond either to OE. wealh 'Welshman' or to OE. wæl slaughter: the latter is the more probable supposition, as the early battles of the Swedes were not fought against Celts or Romans. Kilian's alleged obsolete Flemish walewurte is suspicious, because Kilian cites the Englisch word.

¶ 2. Erroneous uses. Through misunderstanding of the first element (as if Wall *sb.*1) the name has been applied in Herbals, Dictionaries, etc. to the Pellitory of the Wall, and other plants growing on walls. As the word Pellitory has a double origin, partly repr. L. parietāria (f. paries wall) and partly repr. L. pyrethrum, the mistaken identification of wallwort with the Pellitory of the wall led to the further error of applying the name to the Pellitory of Spain (Anacyclus Pyrethrum). The application of the name to the Comfrey (Symphyton) in quot. 1567 is due to confusion with G. wallwurz (said to be from wallen to heal wounds), whence Du. waalwortel, Sw. vallört, vallgras.

The solitary OE. example (in a glossary c 1050) is the earliest known appearance of the word in any language. The word must, however, have come to England from the Continent, but there is no evidence to show whether it belonged to the primitive OE vocabulary, or was introduced at a relatively late date It seems to be developed originally to the LG speaking district, etymologically it meant the nut of the Roman lands (Gaul and Italy) as distinguished from the native hazel It is noteworthy that in the languages of these countries the word de-cending from L. nux, when used without qualification, denotes the walnut In HG the word appears first in the 16th c. (from LG ?), but MHG. had the equivalent welhisch nuz (mod G. dial welsche nüss, welschnuss) see WALSH-NUT

At the time of the earliest colonization these were spoken in the East of the continent from Nova Scotia to Virginia. The ultimate forms indicated are wampanpiak, *wampampial, signifying 'string of (white) beads'. Cf. Rasles, Abnaki Dict. (1691), wambambi, pl. -ak, 'grain blan de porcelaine', wambanhiar 'chapelet'; Delaware (Zeisberger) wapapi white wampum (waopaschapiall white beads).

The word is in form a compound of two elements meaning respectively 'white' and (probably) 'bead' with the ordinary Algonkin plural endings -ak (-aq), or -al (-ar) added. For the first element cf. Natick wompi, Delaware wapi, Abnaki waanbi, etc. white. An ending -wampi occurs in Rasles' Abnaki Dict. in a large number of descriptive adjectives of strings, etc. See Rasles s.v. chatter, collier, corde, tresse.

The variations between -k, -g, and between wompe, wampi, are probably due to native dialectical differences, but the remaining variations are due to fluctuating orthography and pronunciation after the word had been adopted into English.

The division into Wampum and Peag appears to be a false analysis due to Europeans.

The specific words for 'black bead-money' were never adopted into English, and perh. the tendency to generalize the name of the commoner white variety was already present in the native languages.]

Not found in any of the other Teut. languages. Its original sense appears to have been 'dark in hue', with especially frequent application to things of gloomy unpleasant associations.

Relationships to Wen a. (OIcel. vainnaz* to arrive, toil, suffer, etc.), to Wood a., or Wode, possess great difficulties of sense-development or form. Relationship to Wane etc. is possible (cf. Celtic manno*-, Olr. fann, Welsh gwan faint, weak, feeble), but the isolation of the two words is later (ME. and ModE.) periods is more probable than ultimate connexion.

In addition to this association the application to heavenly bodies, when obscured, or when compared to others more bright, possibly aided the general application to pale things. The application to the human face, whether of unwholesome or unusual colour (through various emotions, disease, or death), also provided a possible occasion of sense-change. The senses 'dull' 'sallow', and 'pale, sickly' are often indistinguishable.]

Wan : see One, Wand sb., When, Whenne, Whom, Win v., Wone sb.

Wan- (wɒn), a prefix expressing privation or negation (approximately equivalent to Un-[1] or Mis-); repr. OE. wan-, won-, corresponding to OFris. wan-, won-, OS. wan- (only in wanhaftfa misfortune = OE. wanscaeft), MLG., MDu. wan- (mod.Du. in many new formations, esp. in the sense 'wrong', 'mis-'), as in wanbestuur misgovernment, wanlnid discordant sound), OHG. wan-, wana (only in wanwdfan unarmed, wanaheil unhealthy, infirm, wanawisi lacking wit, insane), MHG. wan- (only in wanwitze inherited from OHG.), mod.G. wahn- (in wahnwitz, wahnsinn insanity, commonly superseded as compounds of wahn sb., delusion; also in some dialect words, chiefly adopted from LG.); ON., Sw., Da. van- (in many old formations, to which mod.Sw. and Da. have added many more, chiefly adopted from LG.). The prefix is in origin identical with Wane a.

In OE. the number of words formed with the prefix is considerable, but none of them has survived into modern English, and only one (wansceft, ill-success) into ME. Of the many new formations that arose in ME., only wanlesen, undisciplined, Wanton, still survives in use (with no consciousness of its etymological meaning); wanhope and wanstreuth may have been suggested by the equivalent MDu. forms. It was in the north that the prefix was most prolific, and it probably continued to be productive far into the modern period. The following words, peculiar to the Scottish and northern dialects, are recorded in the Eng. Dial. Dict., mostly with examples (or references to glossaries etc.) from the 18th c., but few if any of them are now in current use:—wancanny adj., Wanchancy a., wancheer grief, sadness, wancraith adj., = uncouth, wandelely adj., mischievous, Wandought a. and sb., wanerthly adj., Wanease, Wanfortune, wanfortunate, adj., Wanhap, Wanlieum, wanlit adj., wanluck, wanowen's adj. = unowned, wanreck 'mischance, ruin', Wanrest, Wantriveen a., wanwus misuse, waste, Wanwird, Wanworth adj. and sb.

The word has little colloquial currency exc. in Sc. and northern dialects, in which it suggests the notion of suppleness; as a literary word it is usually apprehended (by southern readers) as denoting something rigid. In the Bible of 1611 it occurs only once (Ecclus. xxxiii. 24); the Revised Version (1894) substitutes stick.

a. A straight slender stick. Now Sc. and dial. In Scottish use, chiefly a slender pliant stick cut from a stem or branch of a shrub or young tree.

The early examples occur chiefly in biblical references, where mod. usage follows the Bible of 1611 in substituting rod: applied, e.g., to the 'rod' carried by Moses, to Aaron's rod 'that budded', etc.

[a. ON. vápntak, f. vápna gen. pl. of vápn Weapon + tak act of taking (related to taka to Take).

The English word shows assimilation of form to native compounded sense of the word in ON. are: (1) a vote of consent expressed by waving or brandishing weapons; (2) a vote or resolution of a deliberative assembly; (3) in Iceland, the breaking up of the meeting of the Althing, when the members resumed their weapons that had been laid aside during the sittings. In English there is no trace of these senses, and the development of the actual usage can only be explained conjecturally. It is noteworthy that 'wapentakes', like 'hundreds', often received their names from some natural or artificial object, as a stone or a tree, which afforded a suitable rallying-place for open-air meetings. Assuming that in England wapentake originally meant the act of signifying assent at a public assembly, it seems not improbable that the men of the district whose place of meeting was (e.g.) at Osgod's Cross might be said to belong to 'the wapentake of Osgodcross'. The application of the use of the word to denote a territorial division would thus be sufficiently accounted for.]

A subdivision of certain English shires, corresponding to the 'hundred' (Hundred 5) of other counties.

The shires which have divisions so termed are Yorkshire, Derbyshire, Notts, Lincolnshire, Northamptonshire, and Leicestershire; in all which the Danish element in the population was large. In Derbyshire there is now only one wapentake (that of Wirksworth), the other divisions of the shire being termed 'hundreds'. In Lincolnshire most of the county divisions are 'wapentakes', but a few are called 'hundreds' and 'sokes'. There are traces of the existence of the term in popular use in other counties, as Cheshire and Cumberland.

It is a curious fact that no Germanic nation in early historic times had in living use any word properly meaning 'war', though several words with that meaning survived, chiefly, in proverbial phrases, and in compound personal names. The Romanic-speaking peoples, who were obliged to avoid the L. bellum on account of its homonymy with bellus beautiful, found no nearer equivalent in Teut. than werra. In OE. the usual translation of bellum was gewin, struggle, strife. The continental Low Germ. langs. late developed negen as words for 'war' : G. krieg from Sw. and Da. krig, Du. oorlog ; Icelandic uses ófriðr 'un-peace'.]

(M)Du. wervel harp, ON. hvirfill circle, ring, crown of the head, f. hverfa turn, root hwerb-* to revolve : see WHIRL and cf. WHARVE.

The Fr. vb seems to have primarily referred to the manipulation of the strings of a musical instrument (cf 5 a below), but was also used for the production of delicate trickling notes in singing. The OF. werbler has only an example in Godefr, where it may mean ‘modulation or ‘melody’. It is not possible to determine with certainty in which of its uses the Ger vb was adopted in OE ; perh in that of ‘plectrum’ perh. in that of ‘turning peg’ (so MHG. wirbel). Mod.G. has a verb werbeln to warble.

In the existence of the vb in the 13–14 c. is doubtful (see the remark under 2 below), though there are several examples of the ab in the 14th.)

The Fr. vb seems to have primarily referred to the manipulation of the strings of a musical instrument (cf 5 a below), but was also used for the production of delicate trickling notes in singing. It is not possible to determine with certainty in which of its uses the Ger vb was adopted in OE ; perh in that of ‘plectrum’ perh. in that of ‘turning peg’ (so MHG. wirbel). Mod.G. has a verb werbeln to warble.

In the existence of the vb in the 13–14 c. is doubtful (see the remark under 2 below), though there are several examples of the ab in the 14th.)

†13 One of the three main divisions of an army, the van, the rear, and the middle or 'main battle'. Also sometimes applied spec to any division led by a subordinate commander. Obs.

[Orig. a use of the second element in the compounds steward (ward + weard, weard) and sergeward (sergeward) adopted from Ob. In these compounds the OF. warde meant 'guard', and so was applicable only to the bodies placed in the front and rear. In English on the analogy of steward (also first ward, forward) and rearward (also hinder ward), the term middle ward, Middleward, came to be used for the 'main battle', and thus ward acquired the sense above defined.]

Ward, obs. pa. t. of Warp v.[2], Worth v.

-ward, suffix, OE. -weard, primarily forming adjs , with the sense 'having a specified direction', corresponds to OFris -ward, OS. -ward, -werd, OHG , MHG. wart (as in heimwart adj., homeward):—O Teut -wardo-*, f. * wad- abl -vat. of werp-* :—pre-Teut. * wert- to turn (= L vertere); in the suffix the primary sense of the root is preserved, though the existing verb werþan* has only the derived sense 'to become' (see Worth v.) cf. the L. -versus (a ppl. formation from the same root), which in sense coincides with O Teut. -wardo-. Two other suffixes precisely identical in function with  wardo-, but representing different grades of the root, are : OTeut. -werþo-*, in Goth. -wairþs, ON. -verðr, OHG. -wert (MHG. and mod G. only in the adverbial -warts: cf Wards), OFris. -wirth ; and OTeut. -wurðo-*, ON. -urðr, OHG. -wurt; neither of these types is found in OE.

The pronunciation of the suffix when attached to a monosyllable is (wəd); for the occasional colloquial shortening see W (the letter) Following one or more unstressed syllables it is usually sounded (wəd) or (wəd).

Down to the 16th c. the suffix occasionally appears with irregular spellings, as -ouard, -ourd, -oard, -ohard, the form -ourd in Sc and northern dialects represents a pronunciation still heard

1. The suffix was originally appended only to local advs., and in OE. was still confined to this use. The adjs. in -ward usually denoted direction of movement, but many of them could also be used to designate aspect or relative position , in this function they often occur in partitive concord : e.g. foreweard must often be translated 'front or first part of'. (With regard to the adjs originating in mod.E. from advs. in -ward, see 5 below.)

2. The OE. adjs. in -weard, like the corresponding words in the other Teut. langs., admitted of being used adverbially in the accus. (OE. -weard) or in the genitive (OE. -wardes) of the neut. sing. (For the history of the genitival advs. see -wards.) The advs in -weard found in OE. are all (exc. hámweard homeward) advb. forms of adjs. actually recorded in the language, and the first element is always a local adv. (hámweard being not really an exception). On the analogy of the older advs. with this suffix, there were formed in ME. several compounds in which -weard was added to advs., esp. to compound advs. of phrasal origin, as in abakweard, adounwearde, awayweard, aboutweard, ageinweard, aforeweard; the first three of these were soon displaced by the aphetic forms backward, downward, wayward.

3. In OE. the adv. tóweard was used also as a prep., with the sense 'in the direction leading to'. In early ME. +frowward acquired a similar prepositional use, and later there are isolated examples of this development of function in some other advs in -ward (e.g. inward, onward) of which the first element is an adverb-preposition expressing movement.

4. The type of expression represented by the (now obsolete or archaic) forms to heavenward(s', to the city ward(s', to ne-ward', and the (wholly obsolete) forms 'from . . ward(s', is commonly spoken of as a 'tmesis' of the preps. toward(s, +frowward(s. This is convenient as a description of its function, but is not historically correct.

In reality, the practice of attaching the suffix to such theresby-words as the nouns of a separate adv.) to a phrase consisting of a sb. or pronoun governed by a prep. must be older than the development of the advs. towards and frowards into preps. In OE., though no prep weard* is known to have existed (cf. wiðerweard adj., adverse), there are many examples in which wiþ weard is virtually a prep. governing the interposed word in the genitive (this being the case governed by wiþ) Although in OE. tó and wið are the only preps. that are recorded in this use, it is significant that so MHG. and in early mod. Ger., while no compound prepa. with -wart, -wärts existed, the suffixes were added to phrases consisting of a sb or pronoun governed by a prep. (chiefly an, nach, gegen) also by a phrase corresponding to MF. from in from ward). In this use, however, they were commonly treated not as suffixes but as advs., and written as separate words. In English the same treatment is now archaic; it sometimes appre- hended as a separate adv., and so written. But it is usually felt as forming a compound with the governed sb. When the sb. is qualified by a definite article, as 'in the heavenward , there is a tendency to interpret the compound as a sb or an adj used absol , because of the apparent analogy of expressions like the heavenly, the celestial. Where the definite article was absent, the compound came to be regarded as an adv ; the prefixed to therefore became otiose, and therefore went out of use.

5. On the analogy of the advb compounds originating from the omission of to (e.g. heavenward adv. from to heaven ward), the suffix has in the mod. Eng. period been added freely to sbs. (including proper names) to form advs. expressing direction, aspect, or tendency. From the 16th c. onwards there has been a growing disposition to use the advs. in -ward as adjs ; in the 19th c. or the last years of the 18th c. several new adjs. of this formation appear for the first time : e.g. earthward, heavenward, Godward, manward, skyward, these, however, have been confined to literary use.

-wards, suffix, OE. -wards, corresponds to OS., MLG. -wardes, Du. -waarts, OHG., MHG. -wartes, early mod.G. -warts, the ending of the neut. genit. sing. used adverbially, of adjs. in OTeut. -ward-* : see -ward. A parallel formation of identical function, the adverbial neut. genit. sing. of adjs. in OTeut. -wardpo-* (ablaut var. of -wardo-*), is represented by Goth. -waiþis, OHG. -wertes, early mod.G. -werts, now written -wärts. The adverbial genitives of adjs. in -wardo-, -werdo- appear to have in early Teut. differed little if at all in sense from the adverb. accusatives.

1. In English the history of -wards as an adv. suffix is identical with that of -ward (see -ward 3 and 4); beside every adv. in -ward there has always existed (at least potentially) a parallel formation in -wards, and vice versa. The two forms are so nearly synonymous (the general sense of the advs. being 'in the direction indicated by the first element of the compound') that the choice between them is mostly determined by some notion of euphony in the particular context; some persons, apparently, have a fixed preference for the one or the other form. Sometimes, however, the difference in the form of the suffix corresponds to a difference in the shade of meaning conveyed, though it would not be possible to give any general rule that would be universally accepted. Where the meaning to be expressed includes the notion of manner as well as direction of movement, -wards is required, as in 'to walk backwards', 'to write backwards'. In other instances the distinction seems to be that -ward is used when the adv. is meant to express a definite direction in contrast with other directions: thus we say 'it is moving forwards if it is moving at all', but 'to come forward', not 'forwards'; (see further the note on Forward adv.); so 'to travel eastward' expresses generally the notion of travelling in the direction of an eastern goal, 'to travel eastwards' implies that the direction is thought of as contrasted with other possible directions. Hence -wards seems to have an air of precision which has caused it to be avoided in poetical use.

There appears to be no appreciable difference in meaning between the prepositions Toward and Towards; the latter is now, at least in British use, more common colloquially. The now obsolete prepositions Fromward and Fromwards appear to have been perfectly synonymous.

2. In OE. the suffix -wardes, like -weard, was added to phrases containing the preps. tō and wiþ (see -ward 5). In the locutions tō..weard(s), from..weard(s) (the so-called tmesis of the prep.), the two forms of the suffix were formerly equally common, but -wards now survives only in dialects.

[OE. wǽr-loga wk. masc. traitor, enemy, devil, etc. = OS. wǽr-loga wk. masc. ?deceiver (once, Hlliand 3817), in pl. wǽrlogun applied to the Christ; OHG. wǽr-lougo wk. masc. is probably OE. wǽr in fem. covenant = OHG. wâra truth, ON. várar sb. fem. pl. solemn promise, vow (cf. Vǽringi confederate, Varangian); cf. OSlav. věra faith. This is a derivative from the adj. represented by OE. wǽr true (once, Genesis 681; ?a. OS.) = OS., OHG. wâr true:—O-Teut. wǽro-:—Pre-Teut. wēro- = L. vērus. The second element (an agent-n. related to OE. lōgan to LIE, belie, betray) occurs also in the similar compds. dǽ-loga, treów-loga (OS. trewilogo), weed-loga (ME. wedlowe), an oath-breaker, etc.

This seems to have been the original sense of the present word, but the special application to the Devil (either as a rebel, or as deceiver) is also early in OE. in the loanblend sense. The applications to sorcerers, with especial reference to the power of assuming inhuman shapes, and to monsters (esp. werewolves), are chiefly modern developments, partly due to Scriptural language, of the sense 'devil'.

The modern forms with final -(c)k are of obscure origin. As they appear first in Sc. (cf. 16th c., not in the present sense) to Sc. words, and as cannot represent, as has been assumed, a Southern sound-substitution of (k) for the -ch (z) of some of the rarer North. and Sc. forms. From the first they have been used exclusively in the sense 'wizard'. Some other word, lost or not discovered, has perh. influenced both form and sense. ON. varðlokkur wk. fem. pl. (cf. also varðlokkðhrafn) 'guardian-charm', applied absurdly in Johnson, is too rare (? occurring once), with regard to the late appearance of the -k forms, to be considered.]

Warm (wɔ̄m), sb.[1] [f. WARM v.] An act of warming or state of becoming warm. Phr. to give, get, have, take a warm. Somewhat colloq.

Warm (wɔ̄m), a. (and sb.[2]) Forms : 1 wearm, 2 werm, 3 Orm. warrm, 3–7 warme, 3– warm. [Com. Teut. : OE. wearm = OFris. warm (mod. WFris. waarm, NFris. wārəm), MDu., Du. warm, OS. warm (MLG. war(e)m, LG. warm), OHG. war(a)m (MHG., G. warm), ON. varmr (Norw., Sw., Da. varm), Goth. warma- in warmjan to warm, cherish :—OTeut. wormo-, also wurmo- (in ON. verme wk. masc. warmth, OHG. wirmo, MHG. wirm(e) fem. warmth).

The further relationship of this word is somewhat doubtful. In spite of certain difficulties it is probably to be identified with Indogermanic g*ʷ*hormo-*, or g*ʷ*harmo-* found in Skr. gharmá heat, Zend garᵉmō-hoo hot, Gk. θερμός heat, L. formus warm, O Prussian gorme heat, Albanian zjarm heat, Armenian jerm warm, derivatives of g*ʷ*her-* with a radical sense of heat. For another possible example of initial w in Teut. from g*ʷ*h-* or gʰw-* see WILD a. Compare also the similar phonetic phenomena in Latin whereby volker g*ʷ*her-* gives f before l and consonants, v before other vowels (e.g. gurges, vorāre).

Some scholars have referred the word to a root wer-* found in Lith. virti to cook (trans.), OSl. vrěti to boil, cook (intr.), varíti to cook (trans), vrěla hot. The primary sense of this root, however, seems to be rather 'to well up, bubble' than 'to be hot'; cf. Lith. versmė a spring. The root is confined to the Balto-Slav. languages, and in them has no derivative corresponding in sense and suffix to the Teut. adj., which on the other view represents a widespread Indogermanic formation.]

It is possible that the ME. and later form warnie may descend partly from the OE. wearnian ; influence from ON. varna is also possible. But the form would be normal as a dial. variant of weer = OE. wiernan ; on the other hand the ME. werne may partly represent OE. wearnian. The a and ā types therefore probably do not accurately correspond to the two original formations.

Now chiefly poet. and rhetorical, exc. as applied to the fighting men of the ages celebrated in epic and romance and of uncivilized peoples, for whom the designation soldier would be inappropriate.

The word found a memorable application in the designation of 'The Unknown Warrior', who on 11 Nov. 1920 was honoured with a stately funeral in Westminster Abbey as the representative of all who had given their lives for England in the great war. To which of the services he belonged was kept a secret, so that the comprehensive word 'warrior' was both necessary and felicitous.

War-wolf.

1. Hist. A kind of siege engine.

A translation of ingins bellt, occurring in the Flores Historiarum (Rolls Ser.) of Westminster) in the account of Edw I's siege of Stirling in 1304, where it is said that the battering-ram (aries) proved almost useless, but that the less costly 'war-wolf' was much more effective. In an AF. document relating to the siege (Cal. Docum. Scot II. 1206), the same machine is mentioned as 'le lup de guerre'. The mod. L. lupus is found elsewhere as the name of a military engine, but nothing seems to be known of its nature. The conjecture that war-wolf is a perversion of WERWOLF is unfounded.

1810 HOLLAND Camden's Brit. I. 400 Of these Mangonells, Patraries, Trabucks, Bricols, Espringolds, and of that which our ancestors termed the Warwolfe, by which they discharged volies of mighty huge stones. 1814 CAMDEN Rem., Artill. (ed. 2) 230 Some kind of Bricol it seemed which the English & Scots called an Espringold, the shot whereof K. Edward the first escaped faire at the siege of Strueling when he with another Engine, named the Warwolfe pielced with one stone, two vauntmures. 1796 SOUTHEY Joan of Arc VIII. 134 The war wolfs there Hurl'd their huge missile. 1820 JANE PORTER *Sc. 1. In popular language, any insect of the genus Vespa; chiefly applied to V. vulgaris, the Common Wasp, and such other species as are not readily distinguishable from this; sometimes taken to include the Hornet, V. crabro, which resembles the Common Wasp, but is larger and has a quieter, more powerful sting. The obvious characteristics of the genus are the alternate rings of black and yellow on the abdomen, the narrow stalk or petiole by which the abdomen is attached to the thorax, the fully developed wings, and the formidable sting (which, however, is peculiar to the females and the workers or imperfect females). In scientific language applied generally to two divisions of hymenopterous insects, the Diplopters or true wasps, and the Fossores or digger wasps.

The true wasps (Diplopters) are divided into three families: (1) Vespidæ, to which the common wasp belongs; (2) Eumenidæ; and (3) Masaridæ.

ON. ves (= later ver) heill, corresp. to OE. wes hál lit. 'be in good health' or 'be fortunate': see Be v. A. 3 and Whole a.

As an ordinary salutation (= 'hail' or 'farewell') the phrase, or an approximation to it, occurs both in OE. (hál wes þú, and in pl. wutaþ hálle: see Be v. A. 3) and in ON. (pl. verþ heilir). But neither in OE. nor in ON. nor indeed in any Teut. lang., has there been found of the use as drinking formulas, of the phrases represented by wassail and drinkhail. It seems probable that this use arose among the Danish-speaking inhabitants of England, and became more or less common among the native population in the 12th c. It was regarded by the Normans as markedly characteristic of Englishmen. The earliest known occurrence of the phrases is in Geoffrey of Monmouth VI. xii. (c 1140), in the well-known story of Rowena (wes heil...drinc heil) v. wes héil, printed edd. corruptly waché hél). Geoffrey's attribution of the phrases to the 5th century is an anachronism; the original story as told by Nennius contains nothing corresponding to them. In Wace's Brut (c 1180), which is a metrical version of Geoffrey, various MSS. have werhet, waissell, geuel; drinhet, drincehetil, drechehet. That Wace's acquaintance with the English phrases was not wholly derived from the passage in Geoffrey is shown by his reference to them in the Roman de Rou, where it is said that the night before the battle of Hastings was spent by the English in revelry, with cries of weissel (v.r. wesse heil, wessell, wessil) and drinchehail (v.r. drincesail, drinquehail, drinhail). In the Speculum Stultorum of Nigellus Wireker (c 1190) the English students at the university of Paris are praised for generosity and other virtues, but are said to be too much addicted to wessail and drinkgail. The earliest example of the phrases in an English context is in Layamon's translation of Wace.

In drinkhail the second element is, as in wassail, the ON. adj. heill used as complement. Although the phrase verþ heill in not recorded in ON., it has an exact syntactical parallel in sit heill, 'sit in health'. Whether the form of the first element in drinkhail is due to OE. influence or is archaic Scandinavian is doubtful; the form drechehet in one MS. of Wace is noteworthy from its resemblance to the ON. of the literary period.]

Watchet (wɒ·tʃĕt), sb. and a. Obs. or arch. Forms: [? a waschet] 4 waget(t, vachet, 4–7 wachet(, 5 waycoett, 6 watchott, watchit, -ett, watchinkle, watchatsdo, watchatsdoe, 6–7 watched, watchett, 7 watcht, watched, -ed, 6– watchet. [App. a. OF. (north-eastern) wachet, occurring A. D. 1420 (une heuke . . forez de wachet, a cloak lined with 'watchet'; it is not clear whether this means a particular fabric or a colour); an earlier instance, spelt waschet, occurs in quot. 1198 below; the use of the OF. word in an Anglo-Latin context at that date does not prove that it had already been adopted into English. It is possible that watchet, waycoett may be a dim. of the word which is found once (spelt wasce) in a Douay document of 1262; Godefr. explains this as 'sorte d'étoffe', but the interpretation is not certain from the context. The Central OF. gascke, recorded once (1448), for some kind of appendage or ornament of a shoe, would correspond formally, but if Godefr. is right in rendering it 'buckle' the connexion is out of the question.

It is tempting to compare Walloon swirt royal blue (which Diez would connect with OF. gueste Wood) a dim. formation on a word of this meaning might have been used to denote a lighter shade of colour. But the phonological possibility of such a derivation of wachet is very doubtful.]
